Join the Movement!

Join the ranks of over 50 school districts nationwide committed to championing health and wellness. Let's share insights, resources, and successes as we collectively strive for a holistic approach to education. Together, we can make a difference! Membership is free and open to school district leaders from across the country.

About the NSDWC

Action for Healthy Kids' National School District Wellness Coalition (NSDWC) is dedicated to helping school districts inform, coordinate, enhance, and measure the development and implementation of equitable Whole School, Whole Community, Whole Child (WSCC) model-related practices and policies to ensure students, and staff, are healthy, safe, engaged, supported and challenged, and to drive a national education agenda that supports the Whole Child. With origins dating back to 2013's Urban School Wellness Coalition, AFHK broadened our scope in 2020 to welcome districts from both urban and non-urban areas, fostering a diverse exchange of ideas and solutions. The newly formed NSDWC aims to translate WSCC standards into actionable policies and plans for all districts.

WHAT DOES THE NSDWC DO?

Action for Healthy Kids' National School District Wellness Coalition (NSDWC) is committed to helping school districts inform, coordinate, enhance, and measure the development and implementation of equitable Whole School, Whole Community, Whole Child (WSCC) model-related practices and policies to ensure students, and staff, are healthy, safe, engaged, supported and challenged, and to drive a national education agenda that supports the Whole Child.

HISTORY OF NSDWC

Action for Healthy Kids pioneered the Urban School Wellness Coalition (USWC) in 2013 to support school district leaders in implementing a whole child educational framework. Key decision makers from 33 of the country's largest school districts regularly convened as a community of practice to share information surrounding peer-approved best practices and to further advance urban school wellness.

In 2020, Action for Healthy Kids expanded the work of the Urban School Wellness Coalition significantly, to include new district members from urban and non-urban communities to provide a unique opportunity for district leaders to engage in a community of practice to learn best practices and share successes and challenges. This expanded coalition, the National School District Wellness Coalition, represents school districts nationwide and is working to translate the standards of the WSCC model into actionable and realistic policy, programs, and practices for Coalition members and all districts nationwide.
